

Women

By Barbara R. DuBois

Greek men sit at little tables in little plazas drinking little coffees while Greek women weave and knit indoors.
In ancient Greece, too, women did the work.
In Athens on the Acropolis see the caryatides priestesses from Caryae their heads supporting the entablature of the Erechtheion, of course named after a man.
And they look so beautiful, working
you could watch them all day.
In Delphi, see the column, dancers
frozen in time
forever giving pleasure:

Women.

© 2011 Barbara R. DuBois